

Pregnancy and Birth During COVID-19

If you are newly pregnant or will soon have a new baby, protecting your health and getting the care you need are very important during this time.

COVID-19 and pregnancy

Pregnant and recently pregnant people are more likely to get severely ill with COVID-19 compared to non-pregnant people. Severe illness from COVID-19 during pregnancy can be avoided by getting fully vaccinated. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) recommends all people ages 12 and older get vaccinated against COVID-19, including people who are pregnant, breastfeeding, trying to get pregnant now or who might become pregnant in the future.

Protect your health

- Get vaccinated against COVID-19.
- Get the health care you need.
- Try to stay home as much as possible and limit your contact with people outside of your household.
- Wash your hands often using soap and water, or use alcohol-based hand sanitizer if you can't wash your hands.
- Follow physical distancing guidelines.
- Wear a face covering when you go outside of your home.
- Talk with your employer about how you can stay safe while working.
- If you use medications, keep a 30-day supply on hand.
- Stay up to date on other vaccines, such as flu vaccine, which is recommended for pregnant women.

If you get sick with COVID-19

- Call your health care provider. They will support you and talk to you about ways to keep the virus from spreading to others.
- Some newborns have tested positive for COVID-19 shortly after birth. It is not known whether these babies got the virus before, during or after birth.

Beginning and continuing care

Prenatal care is important for a healthy pregnancy because it helps you and your health care provider:

- Take care of health problems before they become serious
- Make sure your baby is growing well
- Ask and answer questions and learn about your pregnancy
- Talk about ways you can feel better while you are pregnant

Prenatal care

- Do not skip your prenatal care appointments. If you are worried about going to your appointment because of COVID-19, talk to your health care provider by phone.
- Prenatal care may look different as our communities and health care providers learn to work differently during COVID-19.
- Some pregnant people may have fewer or more spaced out in-person appointments.
- You also may talk more with your health care provider over the phone or through an online video call. This is a good way for you to get the care you need while preventing the spread of virus.
- Visitors may not be allowed at in-person appointments, so check with your health care provider before you bring someone with you.
- You will be asked to wear a mask at in-person appointments.

Labor and delivery

- Talk with your health care provider about your birth plan.
- In most cases, the timing and method of delivery (vaginal birth or cesarean birth) do not need to be changed.
- If you plan to deliver at a hospital or birth center, they may be adjusting how they do things. Talk with your health care provider about what might happen during your labor and delivery.
 - There may be changes to the number of visitors allowed and how long you will stay in the hospital.
 - You may be screened for symptoms or tested for COVID-19.
 - You may be required to wear a mask.
 - You may not be able to use a birthing tub.
- Be sure to mention if you are planning to have a doula with you during childbirth.

After your baby is born

- If you qualify for Oregon Health Plan (OHP), you will need to let OHP know about the birth of your baby. Your hospital or an OHP-certified community partner should be able to help with this, or you can update your information online.

- Limit your contact with people outside your household.
- As you start life with a newborn, you can find support from your local home visiting program. You can find more information about home visiting from your local public health department or from the Healthy Families Oregon website. Many local home visiting programs are continuing to provide visits remotely during this time.
- The WIC Program can help you access food and nutrition support. WIC offices are open and having appointments over the phone, by email and video chat.
- Do not skip postpartum care appointments.
- Newborns should never wear a face covering.

Managing stress
